Steel Sheet & Plate Iraqi Supplier :

Grades

Carbon steel is an alloy of iron and carbon, often with other elements in small percentages that affect the properties of the final product.

A few of the most common grades of steel plates and sheets are:

A36 - a low carbon steel with good strength, formability that can be securely welded with a minimum yield strength of 36,000 PSI

A572-50 - higher strength steel with a minimum yield of 50,000 PSI and increased corrosion resistance

A516-70 - steel with a minimum tensile strength of 70,000 PSI that is generally used in pressure vessels and boilers

AR400 - abrasion resistant, quenched and tempered alloy steel with a high level of hardness, making it brittle and so it is not intended for structural applications

A588 - also known as Corten, this steel weathers well, forming a stable rust-like appearance that eliminates the need for painting

A1011 - a hot-rolled carbon steel alloy primarily used for sheets with high strength and formability
